LOYOLA SENTIMENTAL FAVORITES

The Labatt Centennial Tournament, heading into it's fifth year, gets under way tomorrow night at Loyola College and this year the host Warriors hope ladyluck will be on their side.

For the past two years Doug Daigneault's squad has come up against powerful Acadia and Norwich teams and have failed in their bid for tourney laurels. Two years ago it was a fellow by the name of Brian Heaney who stole the show for Acadia and who now just happens to play the Baltimore Bullets of the N.B.A. Last year it was a very stubborn Norwich Cadet team that shot a fantastic 58% that enabled them to beat the Warriors 108-89 in the championship round.

This year Loyola's task will be just as great with all four entries capable of walking off with the coveted Labatt trophy. Norwich returns to defend the honors while from Long Island, N.Y. comes Adelphi University who boasts Olympic Long Jump Gold Medalist Bob Beamon. Beamon,

The other Canadian entry is University of Waterloo, who this year many pick to be the best from Ontario. Their offense revolves mainly around All-Canadian nominee, Jaan Laanist, who led the O.Q.A.A. in scoring last year.

Many feel, however, that Loyola's present quintet may very well be the most capable of previous teams to capture their own tourney. This year, the Warriors have no less than nine returnees and as any coach will verify, maturity is a big plus. Of the starting five, four are seniors and nothing would be more gratifying than these seniors winning their own tournament in their final year at the west-end college.

Centreman Jack Contos, who has been hampered in past seasons with a knee ailment has returned to the Maroon and White and has given his best
